

11-6-1953

McCracken v. Teets [DISSENT]

Jesse W. Carter
Supreme Court of California

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.law.ggu.edu/carter\_opinions

 Part of the Criminal Law Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Carter, Jesse W., "McCracken v. Teets [DISSENT]" (1953). Jesse Carter Opinions. Paper 300.
http://digitalcommons.law.ggu.edu/carter\_opinions/300

This Opinion is brought to you for free and open access by the The Jesse Carter Collection at GGU Law Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Jesse Carter Opinions by an authorized administrator of GGU Law Digital Commons. For more information, please contact jfischer@ggu.edu.

coupled with the boy's love for his own father and his father's mother—show a case which as a matter of law entitled him to have his petition determined on its merits. It could only be determined on its merits by finding whether his interests would best be served by the appointment of the guardian whom he sought. If the finding in this respect were favorable, and his nominee was a fit and proper person (as was found), then he was entitled to an order granting his petition. The mere conclusional finding (that because the boy had a place in the home of his mother and stepfather it was not "necessary or convenient" to appoint a guardian for him) upon which the trial court and the majority here dispose of this case, begs the real issue. In fact, disposition of this case on that ground denies to Richard his day in court on the real issue.

For further and adequate discussion of this case reference is made to, and I adopt, the decision prepared for the District Court of Appeal by Justice Goodell and concurred in by Presiding Justice Nourse, reported at 254 P.2d 960.

The judgment should be reversed and the case tried on its merits.

---

[S. F. No. 18788. In Bank. Nov. 6, 1953.]

HENRY FORD McCRACKEN, Appellant, v. H. O. TEETS, as Warden, etc., Respondent.

- [1] Criminal Law—Judgment—Execution of Death Sentence—Sanity Investigation.—Under Pen. Code, § 3701, requiring prison warden to call district attorney's attention to fact that there is good reason to believe that defendant under sentence of death has become insane so that a sanity hearing may be initiated, warden's duty depends not on fact of insanity but on whether there is good reason to believe that defendant has become insane.
- [2] Trial—Findings—Conclusiveness.—Finding of court cannot be impugned by antecedent erroneous expression of trial judge.

---

[1] See Cal.Jur., Criminal Law, § 501; Am.Jur., Criminal Law, § 485.

[2] See Cal.Jur., Trial, §§ 174, 232; Am.Jur., Trial, §§ 1145, 1147 et seq.

McK. Dig. References: [1, 4] Criminal Law, § 1043; [2] Trial, § 380; [3] Mandamus, § 105; [5, 6] Mandamus, § 112(4); [7] Appeal and Error, § 1230; [8] Mandamus, § 112(5).

- [3a, 3b] Mandamus—Findings.—In mandamus proceeding to compel warden of state prison to institute proceedings for inquiry into sanity of a prisoner confined under sentence of death, a finding that warden, under the circumstances shown and presumably acting in accord with facts and law, had no reason to believe that prisoner was insane is equivalent to or implies a finding that there was in fact no good reason to believe that petitioner was other than sane.
- [4] Criminal Law — Judgment — Execution of Death Sentence—Sanity Investigation.—In view of Pen. Code, § 3701, it is for warden of state prison initially to determine, in exercise of his sound discretion, whether there is good reason to believe that defendant under death sentence has become insane, and in absence of showing to contrary it must be presumed that warden regularly performed his duty. (See Code Civ. Proc., § 1963, pars. 15, 33.)
- [5] Mandamus—Appeal.—To prevail on appeal from judgment denying petition for mandate to compel warden of state prison to institute proceedings for inquiry into sanity of a prisoner confined under sentence of death, petitioner would have to show that there is no substantial evidence to support determination of question adverse to him, and that evidence impels a finding that there was good reason to believe that he was insane.
- [6] Id.—Appeal.—On appeal from judgment denying petition for mandate to compel warden of state prison to institute proceedings for inquiry into sanity of a prisoner confined under sentence of death, reviewing court will not consider additional evidence relating to petitioner's mental condition since rendition of superior court judgment, where such evidence, if formally produced, would be, as was evidence before trial court, in conflict.
- [7] Appeal—Taking Additional Evidence.—It was not intended by enactment of Code Civ. Proc., § 956a, authorizing the taking of additional evidence on appeal, that reviewing courts should develop generally into trial courts.
- [8] Mandamus—Appeal.—Where record on appeal from judgment denying petition for mandate to compel warden of state prison to institute proceedings for inquiry into sanity of a prisoner confined under sentence of death indicates an erroneous view by trial judge of warden's duty in the premises and does not contain a finding expressly resolving controlling issue whether there was good reason to believe that petitioner had become insane, a motion to dismiss the appeal will be denied, but where reviewing court, on consideration of cause on its merits, is satisfied that petitioner has not been prejudiced by errors noted, the judgment appealed from will be affirmed.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Marin County. N. Charles Brusatori, Judge pro tem.* Affirmed. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Proceeding in mandamus to compel warden of state prison to institute proceedings for inquiry into sanity of prisoner confined under sentence of death. Judgment denying writ, affirmed.

George H. Chula and James C. Monroe for Appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Attorney General, and Clarence A. Linn, Assistant Attorney General, for Respondent.

SCHAUER, J.—Petitioner is confined under a judgment which imposes the death sentence for first degree murder. He has appealed from a judgment which denies his petition for mandate to compel the warden of San Quentin to institute proceedings for an inquiry into his sanity, and the attorney general has moved in the alternative to dismiss the appeal as frivolous on its face (see People v. Shorts (1948), 32 Cal. 2d 502, 506, 516, 518 [197 P.2d 330]; Williams v. Duffy (1948), 32 Cal.2d 578, 583 [197 P.2d 341]; People v. Adamson (1949), 34 Cal.2d 320, 338 [210 P.2d 13]) or, on like grounds, to affirm the judgment denying mandate. We have determined, under all the circumstances of this case, to deny the motion to dismiss the appeal and to consider the cause on its merits. Upon such consideration it appears that the judgment must be affirmed.

After the judgment of conviction was affirmed (People v. McCracken (1952), 39 Cal.2d 336 [246 P.2d 913]) and a date for execution of sentence was set, the superior court stayed execution to permit a hearing of the petition for mandate. Petitioner relied upon the statutory rule which peremptorily forbids execution of a person while he is insane (Pen. Code, § 1367) and the implementing rule that “If, after his delivery to the warden for execution, there is good reason to believe that a defendant, under judgment of death, has become insane, the warden must call such fact to the attention of the district attorney . . . ,” and the latter official “must” initiate proceedings which lead to a jury hearing on the issue of insanity (Pen. Code, § 3701; italics added).

As is hereinafter explained, the situation is materially similar to that in Williams v. Duffy (1948), supra, 32 Cal.2d 578, although the appeal here appears to have been taken in the sincere belief by counsel that, because of uncertainty as to procedural law, it was necessary to protect petitioner's rights, and was not instituted or carried on as part of a mere calculated campaign for delay. The evidence before the trial court, as petitioner concedes, was in substantial conflict.<sup>1</sup> At the close of evidence the trial judge (apparently being of the mistaken belief that the law placed upon the warden the responsibility of determining the fact of sanity), stated, "the law throws upon the Warden . . . the decision as to whether in his opinion—not yours, not mine, not the other fellow's—in his opinion whether the man has become insane after he has been received at the institution on a judgment of death. . . . I believe this Court has to determine now whether or not there has been an abuse of discretion by the Warden." (Italics added.) Thereafter the court found that the warden "has no reason to believe that petitioner is other than sane"; that petitioner "knows the crime for the commission of which he has been convicted and the punishment which he is about to suffer"; and that petitioner is sane.

---

*Assigned by Chairman of Judicial Council.

[1] As was pointed out in Williams v. Duffy (1948), supra, page 579 of 32 Cal.2d, "the warden's duty, as prescribed by . . . section [3701], depends not on the fact of insanity, but on the fact as to whether 'there is good reason to believe that a defendant . . . has become insane.'" (See, also, Phyle v. Duffy (1948), 334 U.S. 431, 443 [68 S.Ct. 1131, 92 L.Ed. 1494].) It is urged that the above quoted statements of the trial judge show that he "was mistaken as to the extent of his review or the issue before him at that mandamus hearing," and that the findings do not determine the controlling question: Was there "good reason to believe" that petitioner, after judgment, had become insane? [2] The findings cannot be impugned by the antecedent erroneous expression of the trial judge. (Strudthoff v. Yates (1946), 28 Cal.2d 602, 615-616 [170 P.2d 873]; Southern Cal. Jockey Club v. California etc. Racing Board (1950), 36 Cal.2d 167, 174 [223 P.2d 1].) It is true that there is not, as there should be, a finding expressly determining the controlling issue. [3a] However, as is hereinafter explained, the finding that the warden "has no reason to believe that petitioner is other than sane" must, in the light of the other circumstances here shown, be held to be the substantial equivalent of a finding that there was not in fact "good reason to believe" that petitioner had become insane.

<sup>1</sup>Such evidence was as follows: The court observed petitioner, who was present at the hearing but either unable or unwilling to answer questions, except that he shook his head indicating negative response to his counsel's question, "Do you know where you are?" Petitioner's counsel and a psychiatrist testified that in their opinions petitioner was insane. The warden testified that in his opinion, based on his own observation and on information which he had received from prison psychiatrists and physicians, petitioner was sane. The chief medical officer and the chief psychiatrist of San Quentin testified that in their opinions petitioner was sane. In evidence, without objection of petitioner, were reports of prison psychiatrists and the prison's chief medical officer; the reports state the results of examinations of petitioner made from time to time after the date of his execution had been fixed and the conclusions that petitioner was sane.

[4] As appears from the statute (Pen. Code, § 3701) and the holding of this court in Williams v. Duffy (1948), supra, page 580 of 32 Cal.2d, it is for the warden initially to determine, in the exercise of his sound discretion, whether there is "good reason to believe" that a defendant has become insane. In the absence of a showing to the contrary we must presume that the warden regularly performed his duty. (See Code Civ. Proc., § 1963, pars. 15, 33.) There is no contention that the warden absented himself from the prison or refused to take cognizance of pertinent evidence available to him, or that the finding that the warden "has no reason to believe that petitioner is other than sane" is in any way related to an absence from duty or refusal to consider available evidence. [3b] Therefore, such finding (that the warden, presumably acting in accord with the facts and law, had no reason to believe that petitioner was insane) implies a finding that there was in fact no good reason to believe otherwise. (See Reiniger v. Hassell (1932), 216 Cal. 209, 211 [13 P.2d 737].)

Here, as in the Williams case, supra, the evidence which relates to the controlling question whether there was "good reason to believe" that petitioner had become insane, including the testimony of experts, is in conflict. [5] In order to prevail on appeal from the judgment based on such evidence, and the necessarily implied finding against him on such question, petitioner would have to show that there is no substantial evidence to support the determination of the question adverse to him, and that the evidence impels a finding that there was good reason to believe that he was insane (p. 581 of 32 Cal.2d.). This petitioner cannot do upon the record.

Although he has not served and filed an application to produce additional evidence pursuant to rule 23(b) of the Rules on Appeal, petitioner asserts (citing Code Civ. Proc., § 956a) that he could produce evidence relating to his mental condition after the rendition of the superior court judgment in this proceeding which would establish good reason to believe that he is insane. Affidavits of petitioner's counsel and a psychiatrist have been presented by petitioner and reports of prison doctors and psychiatrists have been presented by the attorney general. [6] Examination of those documents, which concern petitioner's mental condition and the treatment thereof since the rendition of the judgment denying mandate, shows that the additional evidence, if formally produced, would be, as was the evidence before the trial court, in conflict. This case is before us on appellate review, not as a matter of original jurisdiction. Hence, it would be inappropriate for this court to undertake to resolve the conflict. [7] It was not intended by enactment of section 956a "that the reviewing courts should develop generally into trial courts." (Tupman v. Haberkern (1929), 208 Cal. 256, 269 [280 P. 970].)

Petitioner asserts that he is denied due process of law if he is not accorded judicial review of the question whether there is good reason to believe that he has become insane. It has been held that federal due process accords him no such right. (Solesbee v. Balkcom (1950), 339 U.S. 9, 12 [70 S.Ct. 457, 94 L.Ed. 604].) Nevertheless, in this proceeding it has been accorded him.

[8] Inasmuch as the circumstances of this case have brought the entire cause before us, and inasmuch as the record, as above noted, indicates an erroneous view by the trial judge of the duty of the warden in the premises and does not contain a finding expressly resolving the controlling issue, it appears proper to deny the motion to dismiss the appeal. However, after consideration of the entire record, we are satisfied that petitioner has not been prejudiced by the errors noted.

For the reasons above stated, the motion to dismiss the appeal is denied. Likewise for reasons above stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed. The stay of execution heretofore granted is terminated.

Gibson, C. J., Shenk, J., and Edmonds, J., concurred.

TRAYNOR, J.. Dissenting.—Humanitarian considerations have led the Legislature to extend to persons under judgment of death the privilege of avoiding punishment while insane.

(Pen. Code, § 1367.) The warden of the state prison is charged with the responsibility of determining whether there is good reason to believe that a person under judgment of death has become insane. (Pen. Code, § 3701.) Mandamus cannot properly issue to compel the warden to institute proceedings under section 3701, since the courts are prohibited from suspending the execution of a judgment of death (Pen. Code, § 3700), and are without power, except as provided by statute, to determine the sanity of a person sentenced to death and in the custody of the warden. (In re Phyle, 30 Cal.2d 838, 846 [186 P.2d 134]; see People v. Sloper, 198 Cal. 601, 608 [246 P. 802].) A person under judgment of death does not have a constitutional right to have execution of sentence suspended on the ground that he has become insane. (People v. Riley, 37 Cal.2d 510, 514 [235 P.2d 381]; Phyle v. Duffy, 34 Cal.2d 144, 157 [208 P.2d 668], concurring opinion.) Procedural due process does not prevent delegation of the duty of determining the sanity of a person under judgment of death to an administrative official and does not require judicial review of that official's determination. (Sollesbee v. Balkom, 339 U.S. 9, 12-13 [70 S.Ct. 457, 94 L.Ed. 604]; Nobles v. Georgia, 168 U.S. 398, 405-409 [18 S.Ct. 87, 42 L.Ed. 515]; In re Phyle, supra, 30 Cal.2d at 847-850; Phyle v. Duffy, supra, 34 Cal.2d at 159-161.)

Since the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding, I would reverse the judgment and direct the trial court to dismiss the proceeding. (In re McGee, 36 Cal.2d 592, 599 [226 P.2d 1].)

Spence, J., concurred.

CARTER, J.—I dissent.

Since I am firmly of the opinion that mandamus is not available to determine the sanity of a person under sentence of death and that habeas corpus is the only remedy available to such a person, I would reverse the judgment with directions to the trial court to dismiss the proceeding. As a basis for this conclusion I adopt the reasoning and the views expressed by Mr. Justice Schauer in his concurring and dissenting opinion in Phyle v. Duffy, 34 Cal.2d 144, page 163 et seq. [208 P.2d 668], in which I concurred.

Appellant's petition for a rehearing was denied December 3, 1953. Carter, J., was of the opinion that the petition should be granted.