FOREWORD

I am extremely pleased to be asked to write these brief prefatory remarks on the occasion of the publication of the third edition of Cal Law—Trends and Developments.

A brief scan of the Table of Contents of this volume indicates a significant addition to the scope of materials covered in previous years. For the first time, we are responding to a long-felt and hitherto unanswered need on the part of practicing attorneys: a review of current developments in consumer protection, welfare law, and juvenile law. I think it healthy that law journals as well as law schools are becoming increasingly sensitive to the needs of those groups that have been largely neglected by the legal community.

We are again especially fortunate to have a perceptive civil procedure article by Professor Jack Friedenthal of the Stanford Law School. Professor Friedenthal nimbly leads us through the complex problems involved with cross complaints and counterclaims under the California Code of Civil Procedure, as well as giving us fresh insight into the problems raised by Buckeye Boiler.

Although space does not permit me to give appropriate recognition to each of those authors who have written significant articles, I would like to pay a brief tribute to Professors Kenneth H. York, of University of California Los Angeles Law School; Frederick Moreau, of Hastings Law School; and Aidan Gough, of University of Santa Clara.

The reception that has been accorded to Cal Law—Trends and Developments has been rewarding. Reviewers and practicing attorneys alike have been unanimous in their acclaim of this journal. This edition again continues to bridge the difficult gap between the scholar and the practitioner.

I extend my congratulations to all those who have made this significant volume possible, particularly to Professor Judith McKelvey and to Lawrence Boxer, our Student Editor in Chief, both of whom have brought to this volume boundless energy and intellectual perception.
